13. What is the notification cutoff time for transaction requests?

- The notification cutoff time depends on the transaction type.

Wire (Same-Day) 1:00 p.m. Central Time

Transfers (Same-Day) 3:00 p.m. Central Time

ACH (Next-Day) 1:00 p.m. Central Time

14. What is the difference between an ACH and a wire?

- A wire is a same-day method of moving immediately-available funds and supporting information between two financial institutions through the Federal Reserve Wire Network system (Fed Wire).
- An ACH is a method of moving funds and supporting information by batches among financial institutions using the Automated Clearing House (ACH) system. Transaction requests received by the originating bank are collected and processed in batches, usually overnight. Funds are generally available to a beneficiary the business day after the originating financial institution processes the ACH transaction.

15. Are the banking instructions different for an ACH and a wire?

- The banking instruction may be different depending on whether the transaction is an ACH or a wire. Please verify with the receiving bank to ensure the proper instructions are on file with the Trust's Client Services Group.
